COURSE SUMMARY

Trauma can have lasting effects on emotional, behavioral, and physical health. The COVID-19 global pandemic has increased the necessity for trauma-related care for vulnerable populations and healthcare providers. The pervasive fear of contracting the virus, uncertainty about the course of the pandemic, and unprecedented curbing measures have overwhelmed many individuals, leading to increased rates of PTSD and other forms of trauma among the public and mental health workers.

Mindfulness trains the individual to observe and accept emotions and sensation as they arise, reducing reactivity and increasing resilience. Health care professionals are likely to encounter patients with a history of trauma and can benefit from trauma-informed mindfulness to support these individuals and care for themselves. Clinical staff can benefit from specialized training in recognizing and treating secondary traumatic stress, PTSD among other forms of trauma.

This webinar will explore how evidence-based programs such as MBSR (Mindfulness-based Stress Reduction) along with breathing, movement and relaxation exercises can modulate stress-induced anxiety and stave off trauma-related issues. Even short mindfulness practices can lead to decreased anxiety and improved cognitive functions such working memory, and executive functioning.

Disclaimer: These live interactive INR presentations provide continuing education for health care and mental health professionals with the understanding that each participant is responsible to utilize the information gained in an appropriate manner congruent with his/her/their scope of licenses.
